Dear Adm. Turner:

The Department of Political Science at the University of Georgia has established a senior chaired Professorship in International Policy Studies. We are looking for candidates with strong academic credentials and, preferably, with policy-making experience. The University is determined to appoint someone of truly outstanding caliber.

Your name has been raised for consideration. We are writing to you to inquire about your interest. We would like to note that the University is making a significant commitment to the develop of international studies. The Department of Political Science offers the M.A. and Ph.D. degrees to those specializing in both comparative political and international relations and recently received a major two-year grant from the U.S. Office of Education to develop further its interdisciplinary graduate program in Global Policy Studies. We are working closely with the Dean Rusk Center for International and Comparative Law and other departments and colleges at the University as well as other organizations, such as the Southern Center for International Studies in Atlanta, to develop an outstanding program in international policy studies. The chaired professorship for which we are recruiting is a new position that will give additional strength to our growing program.

I am attaching brochures describing our program for your information. If you would like additional information, please contact me or a member of our recruitment committee (Gary K. Bertsch, Loren P. Beth, Robert E. Clute, Albert L. Danielsen, Loch K. Johnson, Clifton Pannell, Han S. Park, E. Miriam Steiner, and Dean Rusk). If you are not interested, perhaps you can recommend another candidate that we might consider. We look forward to hearing from you.

Sincerely,

William O. Chittick
